

Bio: James Buntrock
Executive Director, My God Votes

James Buntrock serves as the Executive Director for My God Votes, the Harris County Republican Party Senatorial District 7 Chair and an Associate Pastor of Glorious Way Church in Houston.

James activates people of faith in public policy. When his church opened during the pandemic, the New York Post called him a “renegade pastor.” His church sued the governor to ensure all Texas churches would not be punished for staying open. Since then, James has led an effort through My God Votes to restore Godly values in state capitols by hosting weekly church services in the state capitol buildings during regular legislative sessions. Participating pastors from across the host states (Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana) have experienced a “wake up” moment where they recognize God’s call for Christian leadership in government and engage their congregations in local politics. The effort is catching on in other states.

James received a Bachelor of Science in Mechanical Engineering technology from Texas A&M, Corpus Christi, and has a background in commercial construction. He also spent a year as a tall ship sailor. An effective leader, he unites people to accomplish common goals with efficient, fact-based solutions. James and his wife, Claire, have three children.
